Appomattox Football Coach In Support Of Youth Programs

In a recent newspaper article, "Little League Programs Object of Controversy," written in the Lynchburg News, I was quoted as saying "most of the Little League coaches are frustrated athletes and they attempt to make themselves great through the kids." This statement I flatly deny saying. Additionally, the quote, "I think the administration of the league should be responsible people who will not allow their ego to take over," I deny saying. These comments are, in my opinion, in poor taste and critical of Little League officials - the men who give their free time and work hard to give the youth of their community the same opportunity offered others throughout the nation.

In previous years, I too, have been a coach in the League programs. I believe in them. I have always been a staunch supporter of the youth program and will continue to support it.

Athletics has been my lively-hood. As a boy, I never had the opportunity that Appomattox is giving their youth. As a parent, I am grateful to the Appomattox Youth Program for offering my son the recreational activities he enjoys. As a coach in the Appomattox school system, I totally endorse such a program and am most appreciative of the dedicated men, not "frustrated athletes", who make it possible.

In conclusion, I reiterate my position on "Little League Programs Object of Controversy" as being totally in favor of Little League activities.

Dear Mr. Vaughan:

I would be deeply indebted to you for printing this following query to some of your older readers.

I am a 40 year-old Maine man who is preparing a national study on the last living Civil War soldiers, North and South. I find that there was a certain remarkable fellow who lived in Appomattox. His name was Mr. C. W. Caldwell. He was 98 years old in October 1946 when he attended the 56th United Confederate Veterans Reunion in Biloxi, Miss. He was then described as Virginia's U. C. V. Commander and had the title of "General". Could any one tell me when he died? His first name? I would be very glad to hear from any relative, friend or neighbor of this old soldier personality, for he is worthy of mention in my national book. I shall be glad to reply to any letter received. My address is: Jay S. Hoar, English Dept., Univ. of Maine, Farmington, Maine 04938.

May I here convey to my thanks for your strategic assistance, for seldom are newspaper editors more truly appreciated than when they perform such large public services as this.

Very truly & most sincerely,
Jay S. Hoar

Letter To Public

The new statewide building code (Building Officials Code Aministration) has b een both enthusiastically accepted and condemned.

Contractors who do business all around the state seem to readily accept this new code since it does provide a uniform yardstick for all construction within the state. it also insures that contractors are assured that they are bidding on the same structure and insures that the owner has a house that has met certain minimum standards. This means, in effect, that he is getting what he is paying for and will not in all probability be saddled with large repair bills almost immediately upon occupancy as is sometimes the case. it also tells the owner that design safety was also considered by requiring for instance minimum dimensions on treads and risers and minimum lead clearance, and window sizes. it also requires that the plumbing and electrical systems meet certain minimum requirements to insure that the new home is not a firetrap.

Some people will say that all this is not needed, but consider the following:

a) A home is probably the largest single expenditure that a married couple will make.

b) That a home is most instances, may be financed over a 20 to 40 year period.

c) That there are unethical contractors fortunately this is probably not the case in Appomattox.

d) That unless a person is thoroughly familiar with construction himself and/or building codes, or has an inspector on the job he has little assurance that the home meets minimum standards.

e) That certain contractors may not be aware that their product does not meet certain minimum standards.

f) That the statewide building code requirements are based on experience and design criteria from accross the country.

g) That the owner and his family will sleep in this house and consequently will be more vulnerable to fire hazards.

h) That an average building permit in Appomattox County will cost less than $100.00 per dwelling.

i) That in many instance a builder may already be complying with the code and not know it.

The Uniform Building Code (B.O.C.A.) was adopted by the State of Virginia and is state law. The county of Appomattox is required to collect the fees and provide the enforcement of this code.

The Appomattox County Office of Building and Housing will at all times attempt to be practical and realistic in administering this Building Code. There will however, be instances in which conflicting intrepretations of the "Code" are made and in such instances these matters be referred to the Building Code Review Board" for their decision. This, Board, is composed of Appomattox County contractors and engineers.

Please remember that this is our opportunity to administer this program locally with local people. We, therefore, request the cooperation of all the citizens os Appomattox County in order that we may provide this service to all the people of Appomattox County in such a manner that it will be legal and realistic and at the least possible cost. Thank You,

W. S. Slagle, Building Official
W. S. Bowling, Building Inspector

The Pastor Speaks

"Money (again)"

Spending money is easy. Practically every day you and I spend a little, maybe a great deal. The fact is someone is always willing to help us spend what we have! Disposing of money is never a problem.

Money and the Glory of God, however, can be easily confused.

Money spent on ourselves is totally legitimate. Often times we need to make a purchase just for ourselves. Using money to give pleasure to ourselves is completely worthy. Using money to give pleasure to ourselves has to do with the Glory of God.

Money spent to benefit other persons can give Glory to God. But, it can also be demonic. It is difficult, sometimes, to make the distinction.

When we spend money to benefit others, we do so in sure and certain hope that it will be helpful. Is not this our guide, our responsibility? Money used for others must be freely offered and give glory to the person. That gives Glory to God.

Those of us within the Church are called by God to offer to him what he has given us. That does not mean we give all our money to the Church! That would be foolish. What it means, I believe, is this: Christians are called by God to use money to Glorify Him.

And that means we do everything in our power to worship God with our money, in His Church and in His world.

Comment on the International Sunday School lesson for Sunday, Nov. 18, 1973
Topic: The Strong and the Weak
Scripture: Romans 14; 1 Corth. 8:1-11:1

We who are strong ought to bear with the failings of the weak, and not to please ourselves. Romans 15:1

The problem with which Paul was concerned in counseling the strong to bear with the failings of the weak, eating meat which had been offered to idols, is not a contemporary problem. But the principles the apostle laid down for dealing with this issue afford useful guidelines to Christians in 1973 for dealing with contemporary issues.

In ancient Greece and Rome, an animal brought for sacrifice to one of the pagan deities was dedicated to that god or goddess. But only certain portions of the animal were actually burned on the sacrficial altar, and the rest of the meat was put on sale in one of the meat markets of the town or city. To Christians newly converted from paganism the question of whether eating meat which had been dedicated to one of the pagan gods constituted worship of that god posed a real issue. For those who thought it did, eating such meat compromised their new faith. Not only did they regard their own eating of such meat as violating proper standards of Christian conduct, but they also thought that any Christian who ate such meat was guilty of un-Christian conduct.

To Paul personally this was no problem. The idol to which the animal was dedicated was no god and the dedication was therefore meaningless. Consequently he advised Christians to eat what was sold in the meat market without asking whether it had been dedicated to a pagan deity or not. But if the Christian was informed that the meat had been offered in sacrifice to a pagan god, then out of respect for the informant and the informant's conscience, the Christian should abstain from eating it.

So we find the principle Paul inlaid down: if what one does constitutes an offense to a brother or sister in Christ or becomes a stumbling block to a person's faith in or commitment to Jesus Christ, the proper course is to abstain from doing it. Paul put it, "Therefore if food is a cause of my brother's falling, I will never eat meat, lest I cause my brother to fall."

Although eating meat offered to idols is no longer an issue in Christian conduct, the broader problem of conduct which constitutes an offense in the eyes of fellow Christians continues a quite real problem. Not only is the question of whether such conduct is regarded as improper a pertinent issue. There is also the question of whether such conduct sets an example which may prove damaging to a person who follows it - if it "is a cause of my brother's falling," to use Paul's phrase. The example he sets should be of true concern to every believer. Consideration of the sort of example he sets for others should be a motivating factor in the individual's conduct. The example which may cause another to engage in a practice harmful to himself and others is one the believer should scupulously avoid setting.

In our contemporary emphasis on freedom, with the pressures to assert individual liberties, we run serious risks of setting bad examples. Individual freedom is restricted by consideration of others. Paul warns against destroying a weak brother by one's own knowledge. "Thus, sining against your brethren and wounding their conscienceswhen it is weak, you sin against Christ."

More important than individual freedom is one's responsibility to help his fellows. If helping one's fellows requires giving up the exercise of what one regards as a personal freedom, it is more important than individual freedom is one's responsibility to help his fellows. If helping one's fellows requires giving up the exercise of what one regards as a personal freedom, it is more important to help another than to gratify one's personal desires. To give one's freedom the priority over respect and consideration for others is selfishness. Selfish indulgence, giving one's own freedom the priority, contradicts the great objective of every believer, "Seek first his kingdom and his righteousness."
